In present milieu, sustainability is gradually gathering momentum in public discourse, and greater attention and admiration in academic research. The growing focus on sustainability suggests that, to be successful, firms can no longer solely focus only on financial performance. Though, financial performance remains essential for survival, however, ignoring the impact on the environment and the society can have damaging effects for firms and can, as a consequence, be a threat for the sustainability of firms. Sustainable Entrepreneurs and firms enact a holistic approach to a venture start-up that embeds financial, environmental, economic and social sustainability dimensions. Sustainable entrepreneurship is in essence the realization of sustainability innovations aimed at the mass market and providing benefits to the larger part of society. Keeping in view the growing importance of sustainability in entrepreneurship domain, further research is needed to explore the role of entrepreneurial actions as a mechanism for sustaining nature and ecosystems while providing economic and non-economic gains for investors, entrepreneurs and societies.

International Journal of Entrepreneurship is looking to publish manuscripts that explore the link between entrepreneurial activities and sustainability from a wide range of theoretical, methodological and disciplinary perspectives. Areas of interest comprise but are not restricted to the following:
